MORE PRESIDENTIAL TALK. Mack" Has Two Interviews with the President-How A. J. Feels and What he Thinks-Some Piquant Revela-

Correspondence of the Cincinnati Commercial. WASHINGTON, April 3, 1868.—Say rather, two Presidential talks in one letter-for I have seen A. J. twice within the past week, and conversed with him freely on each occasion on political topics, and especially on the great subject which now monopolizes subject himself. I never asked him a word casion on political topics, and especially on the great subject which now monopolizes the attention of the people throughout the country, and may be naturally supposed to engross a good share of the time and contemplation of his Excellency. On Sunday night, I found the President, as I thought, quite despondent. He seemed to have read in the proceedings of the trial, as far as if had then progressed, enough to justify his fears on the subject of his own fate, and to have come to the conclusion that the case had been prejudged against him. More than once, however, in the course of the two hours I was with him, he expressed the hope that he would be fairly heard, and coupled it always with implicit confidence in his full yindication. The idea was, that unless he had been condemned before the trial began, he should certainly be acquitted at its close.

Last night I called on him again. He had entirely recovered from his despon dency, and was in his accustomed good pirits-not only confident, but even combative, insisting all the way through, not only that he was right, but that Congress was wrong, and that the wrong end of the avenue was in process of impeachment. A friend to whom I have since spoken of the story about gray uniforms and Rebei contrast which these two paragraphs preent, explained it at once, by saying That's the way it has been with him ever since the impeachment began. He is constantly afternating between the fears that he won't be fairly tried, and the confidence

BEN, BUTLER. Naturally enough the subject of Gen. Butler came up on Sunday evening, as the town was full of rumors about the great speech to be made next day by that disinguished gentleman. I asked the President if Butler hadn't applied to him in 1865 for a Cabinet office? "No," he said, "Butler himself never did, but his friends did it for him. A strong movement was made to get Butler in Stanton's place, and because it didn't succeed, Butler has been pretty sharp after me ever since. The idea was to put Butler in the War Office as the first step toward reorganizing the Democratic party with such men as he at the

FORNEY. I asked the President if Forney wasn't n the same tack with Butler in the matter of reorganizing the Democratic party. Yes," he said, "he was; and he (Forney) began to grumble as early as December, 1864-just after the Presidential electionbecause Democrats like bimself had been neglected and badly treated during Linpeople, and urge that Justice and Right shall oln's first administration. The first thing he did was to write me a letter, hoping that when I came to the Vice Presidency I would give him the control of some patronage that he said belonged to the office of Secretary of the Senate, but had of late years been given to the Sergeant-at-Arms. He hoped I would change that. Then when I became President he was still more mportunate for something or other that he wanted. He always wanted something He thought he could take charge of me and control everything, and when I wouldn't let him do that he quarreled with me. He is a mighty small man to quarrel with, but, if it was worth while, I could very easily show the motive of his opposition to me. The President also showed me a letter from Forney, dated January 7, 1865, in which the writer hopes the admission of Tennessee and Louisiana will not be embarrassed by the question of negro suffrage, and doesn't see how Northern men can vote to enfranchise the illiterate negroes of the South while in nearly every State in the North the blacks are disfranchised. "AD INTERIM THOMAS." Much of the conversation last evening elated to the testimony already adduced on behalf of the prosecution. I remarked to the President that they hadn't yet shown that General Thomas spoke from any authority from him when he talked of using force to reject Stanton. "No," said he, "and they won't show it either. On the contrary, it will appear, before the trial is over, that I warned him to be very careful how he proceeded, as I wanted every thing done quietly and peacefully, for no other purpose than to test the validity of the tenure of office law. * Sofar from my authorizing him to use force, I sent for him that morning, while his appointment was being made out, and talked to him in this very room, to caution him to proceed quietly. When his commission and Stanton's removal were made out, I put them down on the table here, and said I to him : Now, this thing must be done very carefully and very regularly. Here is your commission, and here is Stanton's re-moval. You'll keep this and show it to Stanton. He (Stanton) will get the notice of his removal. You had better take some body with you when you go to the War Office, to use as a witness in case there is any trouble.' He went over to the War Office and talked to Stanton, and came back to me in a few minutes very much rejoiced. He said he had seen Stanton, that it was all right, and that he would get possession of the War Office just as soon as Stanton could pack up his papers. He felt that he was Secretary of War and a member of the Cabinet, and all that; and I never saw a man more elated over a position in my life. But the first thing he knew, Stanton had reconsidered his determination to pack up and leave, and the next time he called at the War Office the trouble began, However, the whole thing will be cleared up as the trial progresses. It will be shown that I not only didn't authorize Thomas to use either threats or force, but that in fact I preced cautiously and quietly; and in does do."

presence of a witness. " Further It is, i on in the conversation the President expressed disappointment and regret in the oppointment of Thomas, but he thought hat all the trouble arose from the fact that Thomas got "refreshed" over his pronotion, and felt so big at the idea of being above everybody else in the army, that he hardly knew how to contain himself.

GENERAL EMORY'S TESTIMONY.

I asked the President if he had read the testimony of General Emory, given that day, (Thursday.) Yes, he said, he had just finished the reading of it in the afternoon paper, as I came in. "Well, what do down and swear that he ever induly on think of it?" said I; adding that anything stronger than cold water. Emory seemed to have considered himself a very important person in the compiracy, and one to whose patriotism and integrity the country was much indebted. "Yes," said the President, "and there's where he makes a great mistake. He talks as if I had sent for him to advise with him, and to discuss constitutional questions with him, when I did nothing of the kind. If I had been in need of a constitutional adviser, I'd have sent for somebody else. The reason I | well enough to introduce in the trial a prisent for him was this: I was told that morning, on very good authority, which I could not well disregard, that important could not went disregard, in the troops about These two gentlemen entered into loud a sermon on Sunday evening, the 29th ult., Washington had been going on without my knowledge or advice. about it. But he makes it appear that I wanted to use the militia of Maryland for some purpose or other. I never made a suggestion of the kind to him. Here again object that time was to find out how many with white troops. I thought it best after the war we had gone through, that white troops should be here instead of black ones. This is the seat of government, and foreigners are coming here all the time. If they saw none but black troops here, they might get the idea that the rebellion was put down by them alone, and that they were on duty here because they were better troops than the whites. I have no prejudice against the negro soldiers at all, but I thought if white troops were to be had they would be better than black ones for the garrison of Washington; that's all. And out of that little matter General

THE CIRCLE SPEECHES, I said to the President that they would ommence the testimony on the last articles, or those relating to his Cleveland that comes from a knowledge that he has and St. Lonis speeches, to-morrow, and committed no impeachable offense." the reports of those speeches, as presented to the court. Yes, he said, he did, and he denied, above all, the right to introduce mere extracts from long speeches, omitting the context, and saying nothing about the sircumstances under which they were delivered. As for the Cleveland speech, he excuse myself and then retire. But as soon as I appeared, some people in the and are cognizant of the whereabouts of soon as I appeared, some people in the crowd commenced to hoot at me, and question me, and badger me, and I thought I'd go in and silence them. I have been in political life a long time and am naturally the gander," and gambling is no exception

No. 42 Main Street, had it hot and heavy for awhile. They would listen to me for awhile, but kept in terrupting me to prevent me from saying anything. I was determined they shouldn't succeed, but that since they didn't want to let me speak I'd speak any how. And I kept on until I got the better of them, and after a short time they listened to me in perfect silence. If I used any rough expressions they were put into my mouth by my enemies. I said a good deal then that I might not have said, if they had not provoked me to it, but I did not say all I might have said either. As to the St Louis speech, the report of that is garbled. I am made to talk of kicking Congress out, when what I did say was, that I would kick out certain office-holders, and that phrase was put into my mouth by some one in the crowd." As to the charge that it was undignified and unbecoming in the President of the United States to make stump speeches in this way, he said he did not believe just then was the time to talk of dignity. There were great questions before the people, and it was more important that they should be understood than that any body's dignity should be preserved. Besides, said he, "Did not Mr. Lincoln make some stump speeches on his way to Washington, an often afterward? Nobody objected to that, and no crowd hooted him or badgered him as they did with me. Other Presidents have done the same thing. But do they propose to impeach me on a question of taste and dignity? Is it dignified in Mr. Wade to go around the country calling me a d-d traitor, and must I be impeached

if I say a word in reply?" From this particular point, by an easy transition, we passed to the charges of INTOXICATION.

The President said he was perfectly willing they should investigate his condition on that trip. The public had been led to believe that he was intoxicated all the way from the time he left Washington till he was a great mistake. "They'll find out, at any rate, that I didn't drink half as much as one or two. others, about whose condition nobody dares poor, weak human nature, the more exalto say a word."

"I think I can guess the name of one of them," said I. "Didn't he go from Cleveland to Detroit, and wasn't it announced with a great flourish of trumpets that he had left your party in disgust?" "Yes, replied the President, "he went to Detroit; ondition to know much about politics just

The President seemed to feel quite vexed over the reflection that he was the only one who was accused of hilarity on that circle trip. "Out of all the witnesses examined about that trip of 1866," said he, "there is not one who proves that I was drunk, But the people are told it through the press and politicians-in the newspapers and on the stump-and I have never taken the trouble to deny it. Yet the man to whom I have just now alluded, has been in this very room so drank that he couldn't stand straight on his legs. Men gamble in stocks and Emory, without stating the real object of gold, and when the stock market is closed. they indulge in the healthy pastime of "fighting the tiger," otherwise called faro. In many of the down town busines streets gambling "hells" are located, in order to accommodate merchants with a "little game" during the hours of toil. Up town, on Broadway, from Spring street even as far as Fortieth street, two or three gambling saloons are on each block, and the side streets are also infested with them. Hovering about these doors are men, arrayed in spotless broadcloth and fine linen, shiny silk hats, and died moustaches, waiting, ready, and anxious to pounce upon the unwary, and lead them to destruction. To what extent gambling is carried on, our said, "I did not intend to make any speech, here at all. My intention was to come out there at all. It is a modest, unpretensious-looking house, the entrance scrupnously clean, and presenting no different appearance, externally, than those adjoining, save the blinds are all tightly closed. Ringing the bell, we are admitted by a gorgeously apparalled women, who acts as janitress. On one side of the hall is a superb painting of Leda and the Swan, on the opposite side, is another painting, equally good, of Venus rising from the sea. Ascending the stairs, we are ushered into the parlors on the first floor. They are elegantly, even luxuriously furnished. The person who fitted up these rooms must have had exquisite taste. The paintings hanging on the walls are rare and valuable, but the most conspicuous, and the one that first strikes the eve and rivers the attention, is the painting by Ary Schæfler of the gambling scene from Bulwer's play of "Money," and for which it is stated August Belauont has offered $20,000 and been refused. Seated around the room and at the gam ing table are a number of ladies, all of whom are dressed in the height of fashion, The players are flushed with excitement, but the dealer, in her Pompadour waist half revealing, half concealing an ample bust, sits calm and collected, and rakes in the "chips" with the utmost sangfroid. Ever and anon, some player, when a heavy bet is lost, calls for wine, which is speedily supplied by an attentive and demure looking Hebe. Demure! Yes, but it is the demureness of a cat. Offend her, and she will quickly show that she has claws.

That lady at the center of the hable sitting between Anonyma and Aspasia, is the wife of one of our most wealthy merchants. I could tell you her name, but tales must never be told out of school. Observe that young lady with a bonnet no larger than a ockle shell, and Bismark ribbons; the one who is now taking off her diamond ring to stake, and which she will lose as sure as eggs are eggs, is the daughter of an exgot back. But let them take the trouble to Judge. Ah! our wealthy merchant's wife find out, and they would discover that that is a loser; see, she rises from the table biting her lips till the blood comes to conceal her emotions, Come, let us away, such scenes do not make our opinion of

THE MYSTERY SOLVED .- We learn that a negro in Columbus professes to be fully osted in the murder of Ashburn, and clears away the mystery that surrounds the bloody transaction. It is said that he is willing to swear that on the night of the murder, and immediately after, he met the perpetrators, a large and strange looking body, in the street, and followed them. They passed through the town, entered the cemetery, and the whole party repaired to that portion of it assigned to the Confederate dead. Here they arranged themselves among the graves and stood in silence for a moment, when, of a sudden, the tallest of them raised his arm, and in a moment all had disappeared! No doubt the narrator

Having had the pleasure of repeatedly playing the "Geo. Steek & Co." Plano, we do unhesitatingly pronounce it among the most perfect instruments of its kind. Especially is it remarkable for its evenness of tone, which, although wonderfully powerful, is exceedingly rich and smooth. The promptness with which its dampers operate. I have never soon evaluated.
